

Insurance

It can be more costly for a disabled person to get insurance because insurance companies see this person as a greater risk. Insurance is based on risk - the insurance company is insuring you against the chance of something happening (e.g. you being burgled). This risk is assessed by an underwriter and they decide if a premium is set or not to insure you. If you live in an area that is notorious for burglaries, you can expect to pay high premiums on your house insurance. Similarly, if you have been hospitalized for example with bladder problems over the past few years and it happens again whilst you are on holiday your holiday insurance company is unlikely to cover you for it. Always tell an insurance company if you are aware of any circumstances likely to affect your cover, either when you are taking out your policy and when you renew, as they could then refuse to pay any money on grounds of non-disclosure. The Disability Discrimination Act 1995 came in to force for insurance in December 1996. It has made it illegal for insurance companies to deal with disabled customers on less favorable terms than non-disabled customers without justification. To be considered as justified, decisions must have been made by using statistical data (e.g. statistics on risks associated with various disabilities) or other reliable information. If you feel that you are being unfairly discriminated against by your insurer it is up to them to prove that there is an additional risk, the disabled person only needs to show that less favorable treatment has taken place not that there is not an additional risk. Below are details of some insurance underwriters and some specialist insurance brokers / intermediaries. However we do not recommend one firm over another and cannot be held responsible for any actions taken/advice given by these firms.

HOLIDAY INSURANCE

Emergency medical treatment (but not routine or continuing treatment) is covered in European Community countries if you have an E111 form, you will receive care on the same terms as the nationals of the country you are visiting. To get an E111 form contact the Main Post Office in your area and ask for booklet T4. (Do not rely on the E111 form alone - holiday insurance is still essential). The UK has arrangements with some countries outside of the EC for urgent medical treatment to be provided at either a reduced cost or free. We have been told that the following companies specialize in arranging travel policies for disabled people or those with ongoing health problems. Some of the companies do ask for a doctor's letter to confirm that you are fit to travel. Be sure to check that your insurance covers any pre-existing medical conditions

Travel insurance for disabled people

There are many different types of travel insurance available. You will need to decide what type of cover you require and check thoroughly that the policy you choose suits your needs.

As well as the 'usual' types of cover, for example, flight delays and theft of belongings, there are other things to check when choosing an insurance policy. These include cover:

for any medical costs that arise from your impairment - as many policies do not cover claims arising from 'pre-existing medical conditions'

if an airline is unable to carry you for any reason, for example, a change of plane type to one that is not accessible

It is advisable to take out travel insurance even if you are travelling within the UK. This is especially important if you are taking special equipment such as wheelchairs or in the likelihood of you needing medical attention, which may cut short your holiday.

Medical information

Standard insurance cover excludes claims resulting from a pre-existing medical condition.

However, it's important to declare any pre-existing medical conditions when arranging insurance. This refers to any illness or health problem that existed or has been diagnosed prior to you going on holiday.

The insurance company may ask for specific details, or your doctor may need to complete a form stating that you are fit to travel. You may be asked to sign a form stating that you are not, for example, awaiting treatment.

Equipment

If you need to take expensive disability equipment with you, make sure that it is insured for loss or damage. Mobility aids – including wheelchairs and scooters - are unlikely to be covered by standard travel insurance policies. You may have to pay an extra premium. Sometimes your household insurance may provide cover for these items.

Specialist insurance?

Most insurance companies offer cover to disabled people that meets their needs. However, some insurers do not cover people who have a severe medical condition or a history of mental illness.

You may need to arrange cover with a specialist insurer. A specialist insurer may be right for you if you are travelling outside the UK for a long period of time.

The Disability Discrimination Act (DDA) 1995 places duties on providers of services in the UK not to discriminate unjustifiably against disabled people for a reason related to their disability. Travel insurance companies have duties under the DDA, but special rules apply to insurers.

LIFE INSURANCE, PERMANENT HEALTH INSURANCE, PERSONAL ACCIDENT AND SICKNESS INSURANCE

If you need professional advice about life insurance or permanent health insurance look for an independent adviser who will not be tied to a particular company and who must meet set standards. To find an independent financial adviser look in the Yellow Pages under Financial Advisers or you can contact:

The Financial Services Authority

25 The North Colonnade

Canary Wharf,

London E14 5HS

The role of the FSA is to regulate and authorize financial organizations in the UK. The FSA itself can provide basic information and advice on a variety of financial services, including pensions, mortgages and Individual Savings Accounts (ISAs) to clients. If it cannot help, it may be able to advise the client whom s/he can contact to obtain more detailed information on an issue. The FSA does not deal with specific consumer complaints, recommend firms or give financial advice. In order to get a list of three registered independent financial advisers in your area please ring:

Independent Financial Adviser Promotions (IFAP)

2nd Floor

117 Farringdon Rd

London EC1R 3BX

They will also include a list of questions a client should ask to their advisors. Insurers should avoid charging disabled people higher premium where there is no evidence to justify this. The financial ombudsman, when deciding on complaints, will be able to take into account whether the insurer followed the guidelines or not. Whilst guide sets out when a person can be charged a higher premium, it also says that insurers should explain why they have refused someone cover. Insurance for Personal Assistants or other help you might employ

You can usually include this type of insurance in your household insurance cover. Tell your Insurance Company that you are about to employ a Personal Assistant who will have a key to your home and that you want your policy to include Employer's Liability Insurance.

This is a legally compulsory insurance for all employers. The Employer's Liability Insurance should cover both paid and unpaid personal assistants and if necessary employees of other services you use in your home. For example, if you occasionally use a local authority scheme they should have their own insurance cover but it is wise to check on this every time. You may also want to insure yourself against injury caused to you by your personal assistant. Such negligence may have to be proved in a court before any payment can be made and you will almost certainly have to pay an additional premium for including it on your household insurance policy.

It is also possible to have Carer Insurance so that if your carer were to fall ill whilst you are both on holiday it would be possible for you to pay for additional help and reclaim some/all of these costs back from the insurer. Remember that for all types of insurance you are entitled to ask the broker what commission s/he is getting from the insurance company concerned. This can get rid of any doubts you might have about the broker's motives for recommending one policy rather than another. Also ask if there will be any handling or administration charge, how much this is and why the charge will be made. It is also a good idea to ask questions about how long it takes to sort a claim and especially to find out what it will cover (as well as what it will not), read the small print. Most modern policies are in plain English so are easier to understand.

HOW TO COMPLAIN

If you are not satisfied with the response of the general manager of the company you are dealing with, you must find out if the insurance company is a member of the Association of British Insurers (ABI) by contacting the ABI. Although the ABI is only a trade association and has no legal power over its members, the insurance company will respond to any complaints sent by the AB.
